The new hospital started by the christian women is now fairly opened. It is located on Williams street, but a few blocks from Broadway, and is under the matronage of Mrs. Dougherty. Besides the rooms fitted for the living of the matron and her daughter, there are three hospital rooms, prepared for the care and comfort of patients. This has been a great need in Council Bluffs, and now it is so that if a stranger is injured or taken ill while in the city, he can be assured of homelike care.

The sermon delivered by Rev. G. W.

Crofts at the Congregational church yes-Crofts at the Congregational Congress terday morning, was concerning General terday morning, was concerning General John A. Logan, whom he entitled "The Christian Hero." He did not seek to preach a memorial sermon but to draw certain lessons from the life of the distinguished man, that his hearers might prolit thereby. He pictured the traits of character which made Logan so beloved and esteemed. He urged his hearers to cultivate these same traits, and that they were as worthy and precious in the life of a humble man, as in the life of the greatest and most honored. A diamond was a diamond whether sparkling in the necklace of a princess, or buried in the dark soil of the earth.

The case of C. A. Beebe against the Equitable Murual Life Insurance company, of Waterloo, is to be taken up to day. After throw-ing money each way and running heavily in debt he suddenly disappeared, and the report of his sudden death at Kansas City followed. It seems that he sent the telegram himself, or caused it to be sent, he was afterwards seen alive and hearty, but he has not returned. There were numerous creditors, but the comclaims that Randall was simply working on commission, that he had no authority to contract such bills, and that e creditors must look elsewhere for their pay, as it was Randall's personal matter. The case is being tought along the line of technicalities and every step is being contested sharply.

The probability, at least the possibility another terminal line to Council Bluffs, is being discussed by those interested in the progress and prosperity of the city. The new line referred to is the extension of the VanWert line, which is really the Toledo, Peoria & Wassaw. The location of the line is not determined, or at least not announced, but it hinted that it will probably cross near or at Creston, and then run directly to this city. It is said that a corps of engineers be on this line between now and the middle of the next month. In case of the line being as rumored, probable, there might be some show for a friendly rivalry between Creston and this city as to securing the location of the shops. onpareil, whose editor, Mr. Steadman, lives at Creston, in its editorial vester day, after stating the above facts suggests that Creston will probably be the favored location, as it is deemed to possess a better geopraphical position. It is difficult to see how a better point than Council Bluffs could be chosen, and probably the suggestion in Creston's tavor results from a laudable feeling on the part of Mr. Steadman of loyalty to

No Leeches Need Apply.

The appearance of a porcelain jar, marked "Leeches," and standing in chilly proximity to a frosty window in the front of one of the city drug stores, attracted the attention of the BEE man. Isn't that a rather cold berth for leeches, Charlie?

"No, not so very cold, for there don't happen to be any leeches in that jar. We don't keep leeches any more. There used to be quite a trade in them. Fellows would come in with a big eye, which some other fellow had given them, and they would want to have it taken down. We would set a leech at work on them, and he would soon fetch out the blood and you wouldn't know that the eye had

"Why don't you keep them now?"

"Because it doesn't pay, We used to have some good leeches. They were foreign-bred fellows. Imported. Why, they cost us from seventy-five cents to a dollar apiece. It is a good deal of work to look after them. Sometimes they didn't have any victims to work on for a long while, and we had to feed them. We used to get pieces of liver for them to practice on, so that they wouldn't get hungry and discouraged. With all the eare given them every now and again one of them would die. We only charged a dollar or so for putting one on. After one had filled himself it was a horrible job to empty them up ready for another case. Sometimes they would die, and then it didn't pay. Perhaps you got a dollar for the use of the leech, and that was about what it cost, to say nothing of having kept it and cared for it. We had one old veteran. It seemed as if nothing would kill him. He was a caution. The greatest sucker I ever saw, for he worked just for his board, when he was worth a good deal more than that to us. I wouldn't dare say how many times we used that same leech. Did you ever have a leech put onto you?"

"The BEE man thought he had had a good many leeches at him, but not any of this sort. "Well," resumed Charlie, "the sensation is nothing disagreeable but the thought of it is what frightens people, and the sight of it is sickening. One evening-1 remember it well-a giddy sort of a girl came in here with one eye done up in great shape. She said she had got hit and wanted to know what could be done about it. She said she'd give five dollars if we could fix it so that she wouldn't have a black eye, for she was going away somewhere and she wouldn't have a black eye for anything. She fairly begged. Well, we told her we could fix it all right, but we didn't tell her how. She seated herself in a chair, and we got the old veteran out of the jarthe big fellow I was telling you about. The big leech was quietly put on her eye without her knowing what it was. He went to work with a will, and when he had got well filled up-did you ever see one that way? They are horrible. just as he got about as large as he could well be and was about ready to drop off, one of the boys, just for the fun of the thing, took a hand glass and held it up before that girl's face and let her look at it. She keeled over as though she had been knocked down with a club. Fainted dead away. I didn't know but what she was dving or dead. It seared me nearly out of my boots. We fetched her too after awhile, but I'll warrant you could not get that girl to have another leach for a year. What do they use now in place of leeches?" "Oh, a variety of things have taken the place. Leeches have gone out of style somewhat. For black eyes beefsteak or oysters are more in demand.

The other day a boy named Medley was arrested and his friends state an injustice was done him, as he is thirteen years of age while the Payne boy was aged ten; that the two boys were coasting; starting from opposite directions, they collided. Walter Payne was slightly hurt but has not been laid up, as one would infer from the BEE article, nor was he struck by the Medley boy.

WAS IT MILITARY MURDER? The Tears That Flowed Amid the Clash of Arms.

Atlanta Constitution: Was it murder?
A group of officers stood in an Atlanta bookstore one sultry afternoon in '64, dis cussing the execution of a batch of de-serters. It was just before the siege, Sherman was on the other side of the Chatta hoochee, and as the officers talked the the sutlen boom of cannon every now and then interrupted their conversation.

But was it murder? This question was uppermost in my mind as I listeped horror-stricken to the running talk around me. It had been remarked that one of the deserters who had been shot an hour before was a youth of "I felt rather sorry for the boy," said the captain. "Oh, it's all right," observed the major.

"Discipline must be maintained at any cost," put in the general.

"Yes, of course," assented the captain.
"Beyond a doubt," was the major's comment. "Besides," said the general, "he was no longer a boy. He was a soldier, and when he deserted he knew the consequences."

"Just so," echoed the other simultanewore a cloudy look The general picked up Jomini's "Art of War," and spoke of it as a greatly overrated book. What is the price of it?" he inquired. "Fifteen dollars," replied the book-'You see, gentlemen," said the general "how these cormorants take advantage of our misfortunes. Fifteen dollars for a book worth fifty cents. The military men all glared at the bookseller, who wisely said nothing. "Yes," said the captain, apparently re-suming his talk, "I was never so affected n my life as I was when I saw that little fellow shot. 'Did he flinch?" asked the major.

"Not a bit. He was very pale and his eyes had that faraway look peculiar to men who are looking death in the face. He stood it like a hero, never trembled, and had his wits about him to the

"Died instantly, didn't he?" asked the 'Yes. Four balls through the heart.

"So much the better. He did not suf-fer." And the general picked up Mahon on "Field Fortifications." "I heard that the boy belonged to a good family," said the major. "He ran away from home, joined the army and fought bravely. His desertion was more of a little escapade than anything else."

"If Sherman was not pressing us so infernally hard,"interrupted the captain he would have been let off, but the cour martial just rushed things through and there was nobody to look after the boy." Boom! Boom! thundered the canno over the hills at the front. "Why should anybody look after him?" interposed the general, "We must look after the army and its discip-

"The fact is," continued the general. 'matters have reached a point where we must make an example of every man who fails to do his duty."

"I admit it." replied the captain, but it makes my blood run cold to slaughter mere boys. The general tucked Jomini's "Art of War' in his pocket and paid for it. Then he turned around and cleared his throat, "Now listen to me," he said impres-sively. "You certainly will give me credit for the average amount of kind ness, sympathy and human feeling. Yet cannot agree with you about that de-erter. According to all accounts he was a sensible lad. He knew his duty as a soldier. He knew that if he deserted he would be shot. What did he do? When the enemy was marching on, threatening this very city, endangering the existence of the confederacy, he sneaked off to the woods. Some say he was going to see his mother. It does not matter. He was a deserter. If we spared him others would have to be spared. The army would be demaralized. Desertions would be the order of the day. We had to shoot him as an example. It could not be avoided. Now, let us drop the subject. I know that I am right, and I should like wrong. Boom! boom! The wave of thunderous sound rolled over the whole city, and people stopped to listen.

"Have you an evening paper?" th ng woman asked the bookseller. He handed one to her, and the old woman, arranging her spectacles, glanced nervously over it. "Yes, it is true that there was an exeoution here to day," she whispered hur

For some reasons the officers relapsed into an embarrassed silence. The major with his index finger commenced drawing fortifications on a map of Georgia. The captain looked moodily at the floor. The general pulled Jomini's "Art of War" out of his pocket and then thrust it back again. "Oh, mercy!" exclaimed the young woman in a low tone, "those people told woman in a low tone, those people told us the truth then."

."Oh, my God! My poor murdered boy!"
So wild, unearthly and piereing was the cry that every man in the room started in alarm.
The old woman had fallen back in a chair gasping for breath, with her face as white as a sheet. Her companion gently fanned her until she laid her gray head on her hand and sobbed aloud. Turning to the sympathetic and silent spectators the young woman pointed to paragraph in the paper and said: "It was her boy-her only son. The paper calls it military justice. We call it The general gradually moved toward the door. His head was bowed and his hands trembled. As soon as he got outside he walked off at a rapid pace. The major made several ineffectual attempts to build a strong redoubt with his finger tip on the map of Georgia, but suddenly collapsed and abruptly bolted. The cap-tain remained. He brought the old woman a glass of water, and fanned her while he listened with a sad but kindly while he listened with a sad but kindly tace to the young woman's story.

It seems that the boy's mother lived thirty miles in the country. Vague reports reached her that her son was in trouble, and she rode in with a neighbor, arriving an hour or two after the execu tion. Ceaught this much of it, and then an eager desire seized me to follow the example of the general and major. As I went out of the door I looked back. The old woman was silently praying, the tears ran down her withered cheeks. Her friend looked down upon her with pitving eyes, and the captain had one hand over his bronzed face. The big guns continued to been all that afternoon, but I did not hear them. I had something else to think of.
